Language	English
Abstract	James R. Slater was founder and director (1930-1951) of the Puget Sound Museum of Natural History at the College of Puget Sound (now the James R. Slater Museum of Natural History at the University of Puget Sound). The collection contains files, correspondence, photographs, certificates and diplomas, field guides, plant collecting index notes, maps, and materials pertaining to the Stanley G. Jewett mammal collection.

Biographical/Historical note

James Rodenburg Slater was born 11 June 1890 in Cairo, New York. After service in World War I and after earning a master's degree from Syracuse University in 1917, Slater came west and joined the biology faculty of the College of Puget Sound (now University of Puget Sound), in Tacoma, Washington, in 1919. He was founder and director (1930-1951) of the college's natural history museum, later named for him as the James R. Slater Museum of Natural History. Professor Slater taught at CPS until summer 1951, when he moved to Lakeland, Florida, and began teaching at Florida Southern College. After living several years in Florida, Slater returned to Tacoma where he continued his research on the amphibians, reptiles and plants of Washington and the Pacific Northwest. He remained active in the natural history museum and in the affairs of the biology department. He lived a long and active life. Professor Slater died at age 98 on 28 February 1989.

James Rodenburg Slater (b. 1890, d. 1989) taught biology at the University of Puget Sound for thirty-two years, from 1919 to 1950. He founded the Slater Museum of Natural History in 1930. Slater served in the U.S. Air Force during World War I, later receiving his undergraduate degree from Rutgers University in and a graduate degree from Syracuse University. The University of Puget Sound awarded Slater an honorary doctorate. Slater was a herpetologist and studied the reptiles and amphibians of the Pacific Northwest.

Scope and Contents note

The collection contains files, correspondence, photographs, certificates and diplomas, field guides, plant collecting index notes, maps, and materials pertaining to the Stanley G. Jewett mammal collection.

The James R. Slater Collection contains the personal and professional papers, books, photos, and correspondence of the late Professor Slater, in addition to numerous academic awards and medals of recognition received throughout his career. Slater's papers offer insight into his involvement in the community of biological research and shows how he was connected to biologists nationwide. Incomplete manuscript papers in the collection include organism inventories and Slater's graduate thesis. Some books in the collection are academic, though the collection also contains a small bible and literary texts. Most of the photos are unidentified. A number of photos are of family members from the early twentieth century, in addition to a number of family albums. There are also photos of biological samples and landscapes. The Slater Collection also holds a series of the museum's papers and pamphlets labeled as the Jewett Collection.

Arrangement note

Organized into five series:

- I. Correspondence;
- II. Notes, writings and papers;
- III. Photographs;
- IV. Certificates;
- V. Memorabilia and framed items.
