Chances are...

as the year goes by, you will need to have many conversations with your housemate(s) about your living arrangement and preferences. We encourage this! In a few weeks, you’ll sit down with your roommate and complete a formal “Suitemate Standards Agreement.” If at any time you and your suitemates find you are not living up to this agreement or if the agreement is not working for you, it’s time to talk again!

Here are some ideas and advice to help you out:

⇒ Set up a specific time to sit down and talk that is convenient for everyone. Don’t try to start a discussion as your housemate(s) is headed out the door.
⇒ During your meeting, don’t be accusatory. Use “I” statements such as, “I feel stressed when there are dirty clothes are on the floor.” Be specific about the actions that are upsetting you and how they affect you. Target the behavior, not the person!
⇒ Stick to the issue at hand; don’t tip-toe around conflict.
⇒ Revisit your Housemate Booklet as needed.
⇒ If you are having problems reaching a resolution, contact your RCC or RD.

So, you and your housemate(s) just moved into your new home? Your new room won’t feel quite like home until you and your housemate(s) take some time to talk to one another and learn what makes each of you tick. Remember, the best part of college is meeting so many new and unique people! Your roommate is one of those interesting new people! You may or may not become the best of friends (we hope you do!); however, building positive roommate and community relationships will help you have a safe, respectful, and fun experience while living on campus!

Communication is key!

This booklet will help you begin the process. Before you start, here’s what you’ll need to do:

- Read through all the questions individually and seriously think about what is important to you.
- Set a time to meet together with your housemate(s) to review your answers.
- Take turns answering each item and discussing each topic. BE HONEST with yourself and your roommates. Remember, you aren’t limited to the topics in this booklet!
- As notable differences arise, it is important to negotiate, compromise, and learn from each other throughout the process.
- Be prepared to draft some shared expectations, which will help you fill out your “Siutemate Standards Agreement” later.

Important things my housemate(s) should know about me: (academic pursuits, class and sleep schedules, how I communicate, social activities and habits, likes and dislikes, pet peeves, interests)

How much time do you anticipate spending with your housemate(s)?

What types of activities will you and your housemate(s) do together?

Should you keep housemate conversations private or is it okay to share them with friends?

Safety Concerns

◊ Locking the room:
Agree to always lock ALL house exterior entrances when you leave.

◊ Following policies:
If one housemate is doing something illegal or against campus policy, how will that affect other house residents?

◊ Allowing to people to enter your house when no one is there:
How does this decision made by one house member affect the other?

◊ House set-up and fire hazards:
How does each house member contribute to setting up the house according to university guidelines?

◊ What other safety concerns do you have?

You’re on the road to a successful and healthy house relationship!
Overnight guests…
