PROGRAM NOTES

The Étude in C-sharp minor, Op. 2 No. 1 is the first of a group of three pieces for the piano, written in 1887, when Scriabin was only 15 years old. It is one of his earliest pieces, and also one of his most well-known. The piece exemplifies many characteristics of Russian Gypsy music, but also diverges from it in its somber and romantic melody. The emotional trajectory of the piece is one that starts fervently and passionately but ends with quiet introspection, developing an eclectic palette of sentiments along the way.

Schubert’s Piano Sonata in A Major, often nicknamed the “little A-major sonata,” was composed in the summer months of 1819. It consists of three movements and was dedicated to Josephine von Koller of Styr, whom Schubert thought to be “very pretty” and a “very good pianist.” The first movement follows Schubert’s typical A B A form, where the first A section’s lyrical theme leads to the B section in a remote key area, eventually leading back to a restatement of A. The second movement opens with a beautiful theme which might sound familiar, as Schubert revisits in his later works as well. The third movement exemplifies Schubert’s tendency to compose new material for his recapitulations rather than transposing each note into a different key area.

The Toccata in E-flat minor was written as the first of a three-movement suite. Khachaturian composed the piece in 1932 while he was still a student at the Moscow Conservatory. It combines Armenian folk rhythms and melodies with Baroque and 20th century technique. The middle Andante espressivo B section is dark and expressive, flanked by equally dark but strongly accentuated and dashing A sections.

The Polonaise in F-sharp minor, Op. 44, is often referred to as Chopin’s “tragic” polonaise. It was dedicated to Princess Ludmilla de Beauveau, a fellow Polish immigrant living in Paris. The piece is written in ternary form, and has a mazurka section in the middle, preceded by a militaristic march. The piece evokes fervent Polish patriotism and all the passion and fury of an oppressed people is audible throughout the piece.
